UNWHOLESOME VAPORS .- The nature of unwholesome vapors has been investigated by M. Lemaire, who, believing that miasmas are produced by large quantities of the lowest animal and vegetable organisms, collected the air of a room in which twenty persons had slept, and which had no ventilation. On condensing the vapor of this air, and submitting it to microscopic examination, he found it charged with bacteria (B. termo), vibriones, and monads, the latter being of the form of a pointed oval. He then examined the vapor collected from the outer atmosphere and kept for forty-eight hours, and though it presented a few bacteria and vibriones, it contained no
